Merry-Go-Round Senate Control May Hinge On Long Switch On Hawaii Statehood

By Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON - Democratic senators are treating Sen. Russell Long, son of the late Louisiana kingfish, as if he had political B.-O. Ever since he switched his vote on statehood for Hawaii may be a long way from Washington, but the admission of two extra senators after that territory becomes a state may spell the difference between Democratic or Republican control of the senate later.

So, when astute Sen. Earle Clements of Kentucky heard of Long's switch, he almost blew his top. Other Democrats were less kind. They hinted that this might be the "third Louisiana Purchase."

What they referred to was the wise-crack during the Roosevelt administration that Thomas Jefferson made the first Louisiana purchase from France while F. D. Roosevelt made the second Louisiana Purchase when he dropped incometax cases against some of the old Heuey Long politicians on condition that Louisiana voted for his renomination for a third term.

Russel Long, who has a good reputation in the senate, says that no political deal with Republicans influenced his vote switch on Hawaii, Nevertheless, his one vote on the key insular affairs committee probably means that Hawaii will get statehood while Alaska won't.

Hitherto the Hawaiian statehood bill has been blocked in committee by the Democrats. They demanded that both Hawaii and Alaska enter the union together, or else neither. Alaska, they knew, would be Democratic, while Hawsii would be Republican-thus four extra senators, two Democrats and two Republicans, would be added.

But Republicans have wanted Hawaiian statehood and not Alaskan; that would give them two extra senators. So it's easy to understand why Senator Clements of Kentucky raised the roof when Russell Long bolted and why less kind senators whispered: "Third Louisiana Purchase." Hawaiian House Trouble

A bitter feud is smouldering among Nebraska solons which could hold up Hawaiian statehood. Congressman A. L. "Doc" Miller, of Nebraska, who heads the house insular affairs committee, isn't on speaking terms with Sen. Hugh Butler, also of Nebraska, who heads the equivalent committee in the senate.

It all dates back to Butler's illness. At that time, Miller let it be known that he considered mself the logical successor to Senator Butler's seat as many others did, too.

However, Butler didn't like the idea of Miller's conspiring over his bones even before he was laid to rest. Very promptly he got well. As a result, relations between the two are strained. They are nom comparing notes on insular affairs or, for that matter, anything else. And some congressmen claim that if Butler tries to push through Hawaiian statehood, "Doc" Miller will block it out for pure cussedness.

Note-If Hawaii gets statehood, Joe Farrington, Republican, now Hawaiian delegate, will undoubtedly become one senator. Farrington has done more for statehood than any other person and deserves reward.

But the second senator may fool everyone and be a Democrat-popular Henry H. K. Lee, of Chinese ancestry, now a territorial senator.

Washington Whirl Sen. Joe McCarthy is now hunting for Communists on his own staff. He unburdened his troubles the other evening at the home of his friends, Garvin and Baby Tankersley of the Chicago Tribune family. McCarthy confessed that he had discovered a serious "leak" on his own staff, that he was worried the Communists may have tried to plant someone with him entirely aside from this, Army agents picked up a report that the Communists had secretly engineered McCarthy into investigating Fort Monmouth in hopes of disrupting the vital, secret work there. Though it's probably not a Communist plot, it had the same effect. Scientists at Fort Monmouth are now completely demoralized, thanks to McCarthy . . . Postmaster General Arthur Summerfield blew up the other day at Civil Service Chairman Philip Young. When Young objected to the way Summerfield was shuffling Civil Service employees around, the postmaster general snorted angrily that he was running the post office department and if Young didn't like it, he would take the matter up with the President personally.

Pentagon Pipeline

Secretary of Defense Wilson has been having more trouble with General Motors, his former firm, than with any other major defense contractor. Hundreds of huge army trucks have been sent back to General Motors because they stuck in low hydromatic gear Wilson wants G.M. treated just as tough as anyone else Assistant Secretary of Defense Frank Floete has assigned Army and Navy Engineers to review the Air Force's construction program. Yet the Air Force isn't allowed to double-check Army and Navy construction though West Germany hasn't recruited a single soldier yet, it has quietly organized a hospital unit for Korea . . . The U. S. Navy will turn seven naval vessels over to the French forces in Indo-China next month as part of a build-up to bring more military pressure on the Communist guerrillas Secretary of the Air Force Talbott has privately pleaded with Secretary of Defense Wilson to stand up to Senator McCarthy. Talbott is furious over McCarthy's tactics in probing the Air Force radar center at Rome, N. Y., and has used some four-letter words to describe what he thinks of the senator from Wisconsin.

Pentagon Bikes

Traffic regulations on the use of messengers' bicycles and delivery tricycles in the Pentagon are as complicated as an automobile code.

Among other things, the rules say that messengers must dismount before entering treight elevators and remain dismounted with brakes set while the elevator is in motion. Speed of bikes in corridors must not exceed that of a brisk walk. Pedestrians have the right of way

A number must be displayed on all pedaloperated vehicles. This, the Pentagon says, is to help track down traffic violators.

Atomic Food Preservation May Create New Industry

By Peter Edson

WASHINGTON-Four years ago, scientists at Brookhaven National Laboratory, New York, exposed some ordinary seed potatoes to atomic radiation. The experiment was part of a broad research project in biology—the science of life in plants and animals.

These irradiated spuds were planted along with some untreated ones to control the experiment and show the effects of the treatment, if any. It was an exceedingly wet spring last year, however, and none of the potatoes came up.

The scientists crossed off their experiment, charging it to hard luck, and decided they would have to try it again the next year. When they went to plow up the potato patch for another experiment, however, they discovered a curious

The untreated potatoes had sprouted, but they had rotted almost completely away. The irradiated potatoes, on the other hand, had not sprouted -but they were as good as new with no signs

Out of this unexpected occurrence may grow a new infant industry of food preservation by atomic energy. It is one of the developments offering great possibilities for wide application under President Eisenhower's new program for an international agency to promote peacetime uses for the same destructive force that goes into atomic weapons.

Atomic Food Preservation is still Experimental

Much work still has to be done to determine the right dosage for each food product. Potatoes irradiated by cobalt-60 have been preserved from December to the following August. This is a perfect carry-over from one crop to the next. It would save millions of dollars' worth of potatoes and other food crops lost through spilage every year. Proper irradiation, incidentally, has no effects on food values nor on human beings who eat the treated foods.

Practical processes have not yet been developed so that whole carloads of grain, for instance, can be irradiated to kill off the weevils. But Swift and other packing houses are interested in the possibilities. If they can irradiate packaged meats, for instance to double fresh storage time, consumers all over the world will benefit.

No startling mutations, or changes in plant varieties have been discovered yet by the eastern agricultural colleges cooperating on these experiments. But what science has here is a brandnew research tool for improving crops of economic importance.

For instance, atomic science has shown great possibilities in developing a new strain of oats that is highly resistant to rust.

When a good rust-free strain is finally produced, it will be crossed over with other seed and used to produce a hybrid for commercial planting. The important point in this process is that by developing new, resistant strains, the seed do not have to be irradiated every year. A natural immunity appears to have been built up.

Corn lends itself most readily to experiments on changes in plant heredity through radiation mutations, for on grains of a single ear are 360 "children" from two "parents." But tomatoes, cotton, peas, beans and some fruit and berry crops have been used in other experiments.

Fertilizer Research Helps Imporve Crops

Some of the most interesting work has been done on fertilizers by the U.S. Department of Agriculture in cooperation with 26 state colleges. Up to the time radioactive isotopes became available, the identity of fertilizer was lost as soon as it was spread on the ground. It was impossible to tell what part of the plants used the various elements in the fertilizer.

Through the use in fertilizer of the radioactive isotope of phosphorus known as P-32, it is possible to trace the chemicals to the roots, stem, leaves, fruit or seed. From this has come a new farm technology on the best time, depth and quantity of fertilizer application to get maximum utilization by the plant. North Carolina tests indicate this new technology means a million dollars a year more on the state's tobacco crop alone.

Another new advantageous farm practice that has been proved by atomic science is the spraying of fertilizer solutions on leaves.

When fertilizer is applied to the soil, it takes several weeks for the plants to show benefits. Nitrogen, phosphorus and iron solutions, sprayed on trees, are absorbed by the leaves in a matter of hours-even minutes. Michigan State College now recommends spraying for the state's big fruit and berry crops.

Incidentally, the value of irradiated fertilizer has now been debunked. It retards plants more than it helps them grow.

Manners Make Friends

You don't have to tell someone what you paid for something, even though the person is rude enough to ask. Just put your questioner off with something like an airy "Too much" or a vague "I'd have to look up the bill." Don't worry if you give the impression that it's none of the other person's business.

That is precisely what it is-none of his bus-

When you're taking a telephone message for someone else, either at home or at your place of business, be sure to get the name as well as the number. That will save confusion. Some folks don't give their names without being asked. But go right ahead and ask.

The person you give the number to has a right to know who he is calling.

Patent Office Fun

U.S. Patent Office experts have been making a number of talks to engineering and scientific groups to explain the patent laws and how to go about getting a patent. To show what a patent looks like, they have rigged up a large-scale sample, complete with legal blue ribbon and seal.

Just to inject a little fun into the proceedings, this sample patent has been made out for a new lock. The inventor is listed as "Jesse James, of Joplin, Mo." The paper then shows that the inventor has assigned his patent to "Tinker-Proof Lock Co. of Alcatraz, Calif."

MISS CORA JOHNSON continued to stare at her face in the bathroom mirror. "So you couldn't wait till tonight to read those letters!" she barked at it, bitterly and hysterically. "You had to take them with you, like a lovesick girl! Oh, what a mis-

NEW YORK &-Three of the nation's top 10 basketball teams nursed fresh defeats today as tournament competition jammed the nation's gyms.

Two of the losses came in the Dixie Classic at Raleigh, N.C., where fourth-ranking Oregon State was beaten for the second straight night and Navy dethroned defending champion North Carolina

Tulane erased a nine-point halftime deficit and whipped Oregon State 74-70 despite a 23-point performance by 7-foot-3 Wade Hal-brook which included 15 free throws. Fast-breaking Navy out-ran ninth-ranking N.C. State 85-75 with John Clune hitting for 27 points. The Middies connected on 40.2 per cent of their shots from the field.
